ABSTRACT

The study was carried in Karai Zone, Kikuyu District. The study sought to find out how effective teachers are using instructional resources in carrying out instruction to learners in language. Language is important to learners as it establishes the foundation for further advancement in studies. Learners benefit from language modeling and reinforcement of linguistic structures through peer interaction and instructional resources. Students then have the opportunity to learn the target language in a natural communicative setting through the use of authentic and meaningful language resources that are available. The idea behind this study was to establish how effective learning language is when instructional resources are used.
